Nik,

As far as we know, the unit was in operating condition when it was disconnected, but we have not verified this yet.

I will see if I can find the engine serial number. We are short staffed today, and I am the only one that can go in the shop today and try to find it. It might help if you can kind of tell me where I should look on the item to find the serial number.

We have the radiator, fan and pump, as well as a muffler and stack, and isolation springs. These are not currently connected to the unit, but are stored at our property as well. I will go find them and take pictures.

Thanks,

Clara,

Feel free to call me back at anytime today if and when you have any updates. I spoke with my sales manager and here are the questions he had on the unit.

1. Was the unit in running condition when it was disconnected?
2. Do you know the engine serial number?
3. It doesn't look like it, but does the unit have a radiator connected?

Even if you or your team can't answer these questions, we are still interested in this unit and would consider trying and work out a deal today or early next week.

Best Regards,

Nik,

We were delayed flying back from Texas and just now got back into Fresno. I will send you all the info and pictures tomorrow.

Thanks,

Clara,

I hope your week has been going well. I am just following up about a generator set your company was looking to sell. If this unit is still available please send me over the specifications, the engine model, the hours, and how much you are looking to sell it for.

Best Regards,
